VANCOUVER JUNIOR GRAND PRIX #7

Thirty-two players took part in the seventh leg of the junior Grand Prix, held April 18 at the Vancouver Bridge Centre. In the Open Section Fanhao Meng and Lucas Davies agreed to an extremely short draw in the last round to tie for first with James Chan; the U1800 prizes were also split three ways, between Louie Jiang, Andrey Kostin, and Ivan Petrov. Vlad Gaciu and Stefan Trandafir tied for first in the U1500 Section, with Kevin Au and Kristof Juhasz claiming the U1200 prizes. The Booster Section required playoffs, but in the end the trophies were awarded to Alex Sabaratnam, David Choi, and Marko Mitrovic.

With seven of the eight Grand Prix events now played, the overall first and second prizes have already been determined: mathematically no one can catch Fanhao Meng or Lucas Davies. However, there is still fierce competition for the remaining places, particularly when it is remembered that only a player's six best results count toward the Grand Prix. Thus, the leaders will be trying to improve on their previous worst results, while those who have played fewer than six events have an opportunity to close the gap.

Fanhao Meng 16
Lucas Davies 14
Noam Davies 12
Valentina Goutor 11.5
Ben Daswani (U1900) 11.5
Ivan Petrov (U1700) 11
Andrey Kostin (U1900) 9.5
Alexander Reid (U1700) 9.375
Lane van Weerdhuizen (U1700) 9
Luc Poitras 7
Evgeni Goutor (U1900) 7
Richard Reid (U1900) 7

U1500 SECTION

Stefan Trandafir 13.625
Vlad Gaciu (U1300) 13.375
Brad Wong 10.875
Richard Huang 7
Kevin Au (U1300) 6.875

2004 B.C. CHAMPIONSHIP

We have received two sets of annotations of B.C. Championship games, from Jack Yoos and Mike Stanford - many thanks to you both!

I think that this was my best game of the tournament. This is appropriate as I thought that Howard played extremely well this tournament. My impression is that the best game played in the tournament was Howard's win over Bobby. Congratulations to Howard for tying for second - it was well deserved. 1.e4 c5 2.Nf3 Nc6 3.d4 cxd4 4.Nxd4 Nf6 5.Nc3 d6 6.Bg5 e6 7.Qd2 a6 8.0-0-0 Bd7 9.f4 b5 Howard also played this line against me last summer in a Victoria RR tournament. He got a decent position so I was not surprised to see it again. This line has always been considered a backwater line and most of the theory has come from GM Kozul, who has stuck with it for a long time. However, I think that this line is a bit underrated. Interestingly, I noticed that GM Kevin Spraggett has recently taken it up for Black. 10.Bxf6 gxf6 11.Kb1 Qb6 12.Nxc6 Bxc6 13.Qe1 This line is suggested in Beating the Sicilian 3 by Nunn and Gallagher, which is a very good introductory book if you want to play aggressively as White in the open Sicilian. The idea of this move is that it anticipates ...b4. [13.Bd3 can reach similar positions; 13.f5 is also reasonable.] 13...0-0-0!? This is probably the best line in this variation. I previously have had little problems with the alternative moves. The problem for Black in this position is that it is very easy for White to get a strong grip on the central squares. [13...Be7 14.f5 (14.Bd3) 14...b4 (14...Qc5) 15.Ne2 e5 (15...Bxe4?! 16.fxe6 fxe6 17.Ng3 Bd5 18.Rxd5!) 16.Ng3 h5 17.h4 xh5. It is very logical and it is much more aggressive than Tukmakov's choice. White is a bit awkwardly developed and so Howard is using the vulnerably-posted knight to further weaken the white squares. This keeps the dark-squared bishop under control and I think it achieved an advantage for White. 20...e5 [20...exf5 21.Nd2 Qe6 22.Qf2; 20...h3 21.g4] 21.Bc4 This is a solid plan for White. Considering I had a lead in the tournament I wanted to minimize my risk. The idea is to just grab the extra pawn and then maintain my strongly-posted knight on e4. The downside of this plan is that Black can achieve opposite-coloured bishop positions with good drawing chances. [21.Rhe1 is a more aggressive alternative I was considering. The idea is now that h3 is no longer a threat I can move my knight off of e4 and replace it with the bishop. If the light-squared bishops get exchanged, Black's king will become vulnerable to attack. Objectively, I think that this is the more dangerous plan for Black. When I was younger and had less patience I would have chosen the more aggressive plan in a heart beat.] 21...Be7 22.Rd3!? My knight is dominating the board on e4, but it is precariously posted. I was concerned that I would lose this great post if I relinquished control of the d-file or alternatively allowed the rooks to be exchanged off down the d-file. 22...Rxd3 [22...Rd4?! 23.Rxd4 Qxd4 24.Bxa6 Qxe4?? 25.Qxe4] 23.cxd3 This is the point. It is a double-edged idea as the d3 square is a weakness. 23...Kb8 24.Re1 Supporting my most valuable asset and freeing up the queen for possible adventure. The f7 pawn isn't going anywhere. [24.Ng5 This fancy move would backfire and besides White doesn't really want the knight on f7.. 24...h3] 24...Qd4 25.Bxf7 a5 26.Qe3 I figured I would have good chances to win with the queens off because of the overextended a5 and b4 pawns. It was also a practical decision as I was ahead in the tournament and there is little risk of losing after the queens are exchanged. 26...Rd8 27.Qxd4 Rxd4 28.Kc2! To try to win my king needs to be active. 28...Bxe4 Howard figures his best chance to hold is by achieving opposite-coloured bishops. [28...Ba6 29.Bc4 (29.Re3 Bxd3+ 30.Rxd3 Rxe4 31.Kb3 seems close to a draw, but Black would have to defend here too.) 29...Bxc4 30.dxc4 Rxc4+ 31.Kb3 will be very difficult for Black as my knight on e4 is dominant.; 28...a4!? taking away the b3 square for the White king looks like Black's best chance for a draw.] 29.dxe4 Bf8 Black is intending on making use of his dominant rook. White can't oppose the rook as a rook exchange would result in an easy draw for Black. 30.g3! I needed to get my rook in the game. 30...hxg3 [30...h3 xh3] 31.hxg3 Bh6?! [31...a4 was Black's last chance to try to prevent White's king from getting active. 32.Be8 a3 33.bxa3 bxa3 34.Bf7] 32.Kb3 Ka7 33.Rh1 With Black's pieces playing on my side of the board, his king will be left alone to fend off my pieces. 33...Bg5 34.Bd5 Kb6 35.Rh8 Kb5 36.Rb8+ Ka6 37.Ka4 Bh6 38.Re8 b3+ Black sacrifices a pawn to keep the White king at bay. [38...Rd2, ignoring the active White king, leads to a dangerous mating attack: 39.Re6+ Ka7 40.Kxa5 Kb8 (40...Rxb2 41.Re8 is a mating net.) 41.Rxf6+- (41.Kb6 Be3+)] 39.Kxb3 Bg5 Black has constructed a bit of a fortress. To obtain counterplay, Black will have to fight for the centre squares. If the centre opens then Black's two bishops will come to life and a kingside counterattack could ensue. Black is often willing to sacrifice pawns to achieve this. 17.Rac1 xNc6 17...Rb8 This is a useful tempo move as it moves the rook out of potential knight forks on b6 and c7. (And he doesn't even mention the line I give here with 30...Bd4!) Laszlo is a time-pressure player and I guess it was to his benefit to play so many book moves quickly with out much thought. I considered this, but I decided it was still best to just play the best line I knew. 29.h3 This takes away a lot of the tactics on the back rank. White's plan here is to redevelop his awkward knight to a solid post and then endeavour to trade off a set of rooks. The more pieces that come off, the easier it will be for White to fend off Black's counterattack. White wants to make it to the endgame where the extra pawns will win the game. [29.Nc4?! ALCAN ANNIVERSARY TOURNAMENT by Mike Bateman

Alcan has asked me to organize a chess tournament for their 50th anniversary celebration here in Kitimat, on the 31st of July. It will be a 15 minutes per game per side, clocked event with 5 rounds. It will start at 13:00 hours, (1 in the afternoon) and go till 17:00 hours (or 5 in the afternoon). It will be held in the main ceremonies tent at the Riverlodge Rec Center. This is not a rated event because it is open to all persons partaking in the Alcan celebrations. I will be purchasing 10 new sets and 10 new clocks which I hope to be using as prizes. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact me. This is a free event.

TD'S CORNER: A 10.2 CASE STUDY

Article 10.2, the so-called "Quickplay Finish," was previously examined in Bulletin #40, but I have since been contacted about a recent game where this article might have been a factor. The game was played between Mikhail Strazhnik and Jason Feng in a Saturday Night tournament at the Vancouver Bridge Centre on April 17; Jason (the defender) describes the end of the game: "Basically it was rook and knight vs. rook, normally a drawn position but my opponent had 30 minutes and I had about 90 seconds. A number of people said I could claim a draw, but from my understanding, I couldn't (and would have been penalized anyways). The problem is, I had no time to 'prove' the draw. If I stopped the clock, how much time would I have to prove the draw? It was fairly evident that my opponent was 'playing for the win.' What is your take on the issue?"

Some Background

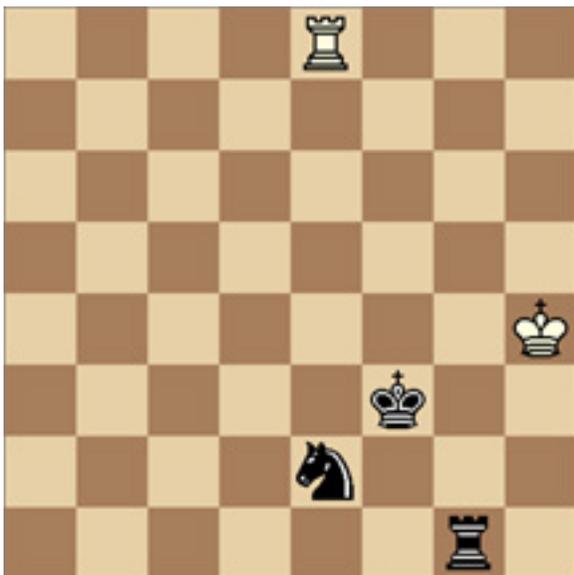

The ending R + N vs. R is generally more drawish than R + B vs. R; usually the superior side only has winning chances if the defender's king is cutoff on the side of the board or a corner. The prominent arbiter Stuart Reuben discussed Article 10.2 in his Chess Organiser's Handbook, which has gone through two editions; he gives an example of R + N vs. R in both editions, but they are different. In the first edition (1997) he presents a position where the defender has no particular problems, and notes that an arbiter's response to a draw claim under 10.2 should be "Play on. You should count the number of moves made. If White [defending] makes something like 46 moves before his flag falls, then you can award a draw if Black has no forced mate." This is reasonable, although I would be likely to award the draw if the attacker was not making any progress.

However, Reuben's opinion in the second edition (2001) is substantially different. Here is the new position he presents:

His comment now is "Reject the claim. The position is theoretically drawn, but Kasparov recently beat Judit Polgar from such a position. However you may prefer to postpone the decision and award Black an extra two minutes. Then, if White's flag falls, you might allow the claim if the number of moves without capture is close to 50."

Personally I find the idea of rejecting the claim in such a position perverse: White has the best possible defensive position imaginable (the superior side's king is cutoff) and should draw easily. The Polgar-Kasparov game he mentions was at Dos Hermanas in 1996, and reached this position:

This position is obviously far worse for the defender than the one Reuben cites, yet it is still a theoretical draw: Polgar lost because she did not defend accurately (see diagram 8.03 in Müller and Lamprecht's Fundamental Chess Endings for a complete analysis).

Strazhnik-Feng

Apparently a gamescore of the ending does not exist (White, who had 30 minutes, should really still have been recording), but I gather that Black's king was cutoff on the side of the board, thus giving White reasonable chances to play for a win. So the two pertinent questions are: 1) should Jason have claimed a draw under article 10.2 (on the basis that "the position cannot be won by normal means"); and 2) what should the arbiter have done if he did?

1) Yes. Article 10.2 was designed for precisely this sort of situation. As noted above, Jason was worried about being penalized and not being able to prove the position was a draw. For the former, the "penalty" in this case would potentially be two extra minutes awarded to the opponent; since White was so far ahead on time anyway, this shouldn't have been a deterrent (obviously it might be if both players were low on time). For the latter, except for certain very clear cases, most of the time the arbiter will not ask you to verbally "prove" the position is a draw - much more likely you will have to demonstrate it through the continued game.

2) As I stated in Bulletin #40 this article is somewhat subjective, but personally I would postpone my decision and have the game continue. While the position might be a theoretical draw, the fact that Black's king was cutoff does give White good reason to play for a win, and I tend to feel that unless the draw is extremely clear, the defender should be given the chance to go wrong. If the defender plays accurately and the superior side is not making progress, then it is reasonable to award the draw when the defender's flag falls. Keep in mind that other factors might also apply - the 50-move rule, triple-repetition, or possibly the portion of article 10.2 that deals with the opponent "not trying to win by normal means," i.e., merely shuffling pieces about and trying to flag the opponent.

MORE THAN THIRTY YEARS AGO by Jonathan Berry

[In the last Bulletin] Bruce Harper mentioned the successes of Nigel Fullbrook and Tyler Johnson with the Alekhine Defence in Canadian Junior Championships. This opening has a longer history in BC's attempts to scale the national youth Olympus, and not so thoroughly with success.

I played in two Canadian Juniors, in 1970 and 1972, and didn't finish any better than 3rd. In those years the World and Canadian Juniors were biennial.

In 1970, John MacPhail (who eventually finished 2nd) hallucinated, sacrificing on move 11. He finished a piece down for two inconsiderable pawns. However, don't write the game off there, I managed to lose when a measly pawn came back to haunt me.

Yes, I felt bad after that game!

In the 1972 event, Jean Hebert was seen as a "dark horse" by Lawrence Day to win the championship. Not so soon, although he did become an IM, postal GM, columnist, book author, magazine editor

This game, with its flashy finish, is one of the few Canadian games ever to be published in the Soviet magazine 64. Another that I remember is Bob Zuk's meritorious loss to Boris Spassky at the 1971 Canadian Open in Vancouver, annotated. This one appeared without notes.

MacPhail beat me again in 1972 -- maybe I should have tried the Alekhine instead of the Incredible Defence 1.e4 e5 2.Nf3 Nc6 3.Bb5 Qe7 -- and he won the tournament, though I extracted partial revenge at the 1972 Zonal. For decades he retired from tournament chess, but recently came back. I have +2=2-3

"lifetime" against him, but we're not finished yet. By coincidence, John's uncle became a neighbour and good friend to my parents when they retired to Mexico, also more than three decades ago.
